This Springfield Armory M1 Garand was manufactured sometime in 1945, based on the serial number range for WWII Garands. The M1 Garand was adopted as the new American Service rifle in 1936. It was the first autoloading rifle that the military adopted into service, replacing the bolt action Springfield M1903. Seeing use in both World War II and the Korean War, before being replaced by the Springfield Armory M14 rifle in 1957. However the M1 Garand has seen plenty of use throughout the cold war era as well, seeing several hundred thousands sent to Vietnam and surplus rifles sold off to foreign allies.

Featuring a 24" barrel, bladed front sight and post war rear peep sight, internal magazine well, manual safety, slings studs, and has a hardwood full stock.

"The greatest battle implement ever devised", A famous quote from General George S. Patton as he spoke fondly of the Springfield M1 Garand. You can say the same when you bring this beautiful Garand home!
